Recalling May 8, 1945: The War in Europe Ended But the Triumph Was Restrained

Jubilant soldiers of the U.S. 7th Army marked victory at the Nuremberg stadium, where Hitler held Nazi rallies.

By Drew Middleton

New York Times Service NEW YORK - There was a brief ceremony in the industrial school at Reims, and then it was over. General Walter Bedell Smith, chief of staff for General Dwight D. Eisenhower, the supreme allied commander, presided. With him were General Carl Spaarz of the Air Force, General Frederick Morgan of the British Army, Admiral Sir Harold Burrough of the Royal Navy, Air Marshal James Robb of the Royal Air Force, and France's General François Sevez. The Sovi-et Union was represented by Major General Ivan Susionarov.

General Alfred Jodl and Admiral Hans George von Friedeburg, the German represen-tatives, were escorted in by two British officers General Kenneth Strong Eisenhower's head of intelligence, laid the surrender documents be-fore them. General Smith asked if they were prepared to sign. General Jodl nodded. He and Friedeburg signed, followed by Generals Smith, Susloparov, and Sevez.

"I want to say a word," said General Jodl, straight-backed and impassive. "With this signature the German people and the German armed forces are, for better or worse, delivered into the victor's hands. In this war, which has lasted more than five years, both have achieved and suffered more than perhaps any other peo-ple in the world. In this hour I can only express the hope that the victors will treat them with

The Rhine was crossed. The German pocket in the Ruhr fell to the American 1st and 9th Armies. The British and Canadians swept into northern Germany. The 3d Army dashed to Linz in Austria and Pilsen in Czechoslovakia. The 7th Army rumbled to the Austrian frontier.

Old and famous cities fell: Hamburg and Bremen, Frankfurt and Munich. By March, the Germans' front had lost cohesion and tens of thousands of them were taken prisoner. About 80,000 of the enemy were routed by a smaller American armored force in the Saar-Moselle-Rhine triangle. Day after day, Allied bombers

> As March gave way to April, German resistance in the west dwindled. There were occasional fierce fights in which the Germans, usually troops of the Waffen SS, fought to the last man and bullet. As they advanced. Allied troops entered concentration camps at Dachau and Belsen. Men who had unflinchingly endured D-Day were sickened by what they saw.

To the east, the Germans were better organized and put up a stiffer fight. But from the congratulatory communiques issued by Mos-cow, it was clear that the Soviet armies were sweeping across Poland and moving into Germany toward Berlin.

By the third week in April, as news of the Soviet advance swept through the German Army, thousands seemed downright eager to surrender and enter the safe haven of Western prisoner of war camps. First in a trickle, then in a flood. German civilians and soldiers by the tens of thousands streamed westward away from the advancing Russians. The surrender at Reims was preceded by what was probably the most effective ultimatum ever issued by Eisenhower. Under guard in Reims. the German delegation asked for another 48 hours. "You tell them that 48 hours from midnight tonight, I will close my lines on the western front so no more Germans can get through. Eisenhower answered. The German delegation knew he meant it and came to the table without further delay.

With so many pieces to pick up, there was (Continued on Page 2, Col. 1)

MADRID - President Ronald Reagan and Prime Minister Felipe González of Spain acknowledged disagreement Tuesday over Nicaragua but said their nations "have cordial and friendly relations" that go "beyond our differences."

The scheduled one-hour, final meeting between the two leaders was stretched to one hour and 40 minutes, with the agenda also including the Middle East, Spain's membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the 12,600 U.S. troops in Spain.

Saudis Creating a New 'City' for Foreign Diplomats

The Saudi government has told the 8,000 foreign diplomats and their dependents living in Jeddah that they have until September to move their embassies to Rivadh Riyadh has been the official Saudi capital since the kingdom was unified by Ibn Saud in 1932. However, strict limits were placed on outsiders in the traditional home of the Saudi royal family. where wristwatches and bicycles were prohibited as foreign vices only a generation ago and foreign airlines were until recently banned from landing.

The strictures kept the diplomatic corps, and the Saudi For-eign Ministry as well, isolated in Jeddah, a seaport that historically hole on the world.

In 1975, however, the government decided to move the Foreign Ministry to Riyadh, where the other ministries are located. The diplomats were told to pack up as

The result seemed quintessen-tially Saudi: A posh, 200-acre diplomatic quarter is under construction and, despite its lavish amenities, it has already managed to evoke controversy among its prospective residents.

Many world capitals have an area favored by diplomats, and some governments, notably the Chinese and the Russians, impose strict limits on where diplomats may live, but it is unusual to have a self-contained city where all the

the host government to live and work.

"It will probably be more difficult and less satisfying to live out there than in Jeddah." a Western diplomat said. "There will be no need to leave the quarter except to get into your limousine to visit the Saudi Foreign Ministry."

Saudi officials are trying to dispel the notion that the government hopes to isolate foreigners from Riyadh's ultraconservative Islamic society by building the quarter a 15-minute drive from the city's center. For one thing, the Saudis have made plans for 20,000 Saudis and nondiplomatic foreigners to move into the area. "We're not building a ghetto;

this is an open community," said

Ahmed Salloum, who is supervising construction of the quarter for the Riyadh Development Author-

Mr. Salloum said that the diplomatic quarter had been conceived as a way to ease the move to Riyadh, where real estate speculation has made land 10 times more expensive than the newly developed acreage that the government is selling.

The Saudis are spending money lavishly to make the complex comfortable. They are building roads, a 14-building internationa school complex, a diplomatic club and a huge sports facility that will be open to the public and shopping centers that will be devel-oped privately.

Each government is responsible for designing and building its own embassy; sites were determined by lottery. An enormous U.S. bassy complex, at six acres (2.4 hectares) the largest in the quarter, is about half completed. It will cost about $27 million.

"So far, it's a lot of fun," said Guy Ducrey, the Swiss ambassa-dor, who moved in last January as the quarter's second tenant. South Korea was the first.

Mr. Ducrey is one of a number of envoys who say they prefer Riyadh's climate to Jeddah's. Riyadh may be the world's hottest capital - summertime temperatures hover around 115 degrees Fahrenheit (46 degrees centi-grade) - but it lacks Jeddah's humidity, which the British adventurer, T.E. Lawrence, once likened to being "hit in the head with a shovei."

A number of diplomats said that they were withholding judg-ment on the new quarter until they heard from the Saudis about how much freedom they will have.

For example, foreign women are allowed to drive in the Arameo oil compound in Dhahran, which is forbidden elsewhere in the kingdom. Some diplomats hope that a similar policy will apply in the diplomatic quarter, where most diplomats will live some distance from their embas-

New York Times Service BONN - Richard R. Burt assistant secretary of state for European affairs, on Tuesday denied reports that he had advised President Ronald Reagan against meet-ing Willy Brandt, the leader of West Germany's opposition Social Democratic Party, during the president's visit here.

Mr. Burt was acting to defuse a clash with Social Democratic leaders, after West German newspapers reported that the president refused to meet the former chancellor at Mr. Burt's advice, because of strident anti-American tones at Social Democratic-led demonstrations to protest Mr. Reagan's policies.

The incident provoked strong reaction here because of reports that Mr. Burt will succeed Arthur Burns as ambassador to West Germany. Social Democratic leaders reacted bitterly to what they considered a snub. Mr. Brandt refused to attend a state dinner with Mr. Reagan Sunday night.

In a statement released by the U.S. Embassy, Mr. Burt said the charge had "no foundation in fact."

Poland Says U.S. Shouldn't Meddle

WARSAW (AP) - Poland accused the United States on Tuesday of attempting to destabilize the country by fomenting anti-government demonstrations and warned that U.S.-Polish relations would not improve unless the Reagan administration stopped interfering in the country's internal affairs.

The government spokesman, Jerzy Urban, said, "These forces, which organize street unrest in Poland from time to time, or try to organize them, take advantage of the open, public political support of the American administration. It is a fact that these forces are financed from: Western sources."

Mr. Urban spoke at a press conference a day after the Foreign Ministry protested the U.S. expulsion of four Polish diplomats and after Poland suspended the air courier service used to fly mail and supplies to the U.S. Embassy in Warsaw every two to three months. The United States had ordered the four Poles to leave in response to Poland's expulsion of two U.S. diplomats it charged took part in an illegal demonstration on May 1,

New York Seat Belts Cut Traffic Deaths

The number of drivers and passengers killed in automobile accidents in New York state declined by 27 percent in the three months after seat belts became mandatory on Jan. 1, officials say. They said 184 people died in that period compared to 252 for the first three months of 1984. The New York Times reports.

Officials said that seat belts deserved credit for the decline because other figures, such as the number of pedestrian deaths and the overall number of accidents. remained fairly constant.

New York was the first state to emect a mandatory seat belt law for occupants of passenger vehi-cles. (Taxis are exempt because, officials say, the belts could be used to choke drivers during a robbery.) New Jersey's law took effect March 1, and laws in Illinois, Michigan, Missouri, Indiana and New Mexico will go into force within months. Seat belt laws were rejected in Florida and

In part, the catalyst for the discussion was a study indicating that there was a broad public perception. tion that news organizations are prejudiced. Mr. Boccardi said that confuse coverage with bias. They assume you are expressing approval because you're interview-ing people," Mr. Hewitt said. "We would have interviewed Hitler."

Both Mr. Hewitt and Mr. Bradlee said that much of the credibility issue was being manufactured by extreme conservatives who did not want fairness, but a conservative bias. Extreme liberal groups, they said, also have been critical.

But Mr. Jinks said it would be a serious error to dismiss the issue of press credibility as a "conspiracy theory" by political extremists. "Fairness is the ultimate issue," he said, adding that news organizauons were "perceived as more pow-erful than they used to be, and people distrust power."

Why so many bankers bank on Nixdorf

When it comes to choosing which computer company to work with, banks can take their pick. After all, practically every computer company in the world makes a computer that banks can use. ' So why do so many banks rely on Nixdorf? The answer goes far beyond hardware or system features.

True. Nixdorf computers have a well-deserved reputation for standing up to really tough usage, and that's important when downtime is measured in millions of pounds, marks, francs and dollars.

But hardware alone never sold a banker anything. Bankers require computers that can operate as part of complete telecommunications systems. They require speed, and excruciating accuracy. They require ingenious programming to handle incredibly complex transactions with hundreds of real-time variables. They require international capability, uncompromisable security, and absolute dependability under all kinds of conditions. The sheer volume of transactions, and the interdependence of those transactions requires a processing capability far beyond what is needed in most other industries.

And the banking business is changing so rapidly that it's not enough to have a computer system. Today's needs require that there be a company standing behind that computer. A company with the size, the resources, the people, the technology, and the will to meet the specialized needs of the most demanding customer. Nixdorf. And every bank knows it.

Now you do, too.

Reagan's Visit to Spain

Bonn: A Nonfatal Failure

European trip is to draw the democracies a little closer together, and that is the business that has taken him to Spain. This brief visit is a gesture of some importance and represents two days well spent.

During the long years of geriatric fascism under Francisco Franco, Spain remained isolated from the rest of Western Europe. Its neighbors dealt uneasily with General Franco's Spain, and usually at arm's length. But with Franco's death a decade ago, the rest of Western Europe and the United States extended warm support to the new parliamentary government. Eventually it was invited into the two international organizations that have been the foundations of Western Europe's security and prosperity for the past generation.

Spain joined the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in 1982 and will enter the European Community in January. Mr. Reagan's arrival in Madrid constituted a celebration of Spain's membership in good standing in the association of parliamentary democracies, with all the privileges attached thereto. And, as Mr. Reagan will probably find the opportunity to remind his hosts, those privileges are not trivial. Portugal has followed a closely parallel path, and Mr. Reagan will make a similar visit there, for the same reason, before he leaves Europe.

Thanks mostly to President François Mit-terrand of France, the Bonn summit conference can be certified a failure. Looking even more intently than his partners to his political flanks at home, he refused to schedule a new round of negotiations to reduce trade barriers.

His posturing, at a time of mounting protec-

Summit conferences habitually exaggerate their own importance and then feel compelled to emphasize agreements and to paper over differences. This time, the seven — West Germany, Britain, France and Italy plus Japan,

:Canada and the United States — could not conceal what divides them. Hurrah for that.

The Reagan administration had been pressing for more than two years for new trade negotiations. Conservatives believe in free trade and rightly want more of it. As time passed, even more urgent reasons appeared:

America's soaring imports and sagging ex-ports. Both trends have been greatly accelerated by the high value of the dollar, reflecting the administration's big budget deficits.

To ward off congressional threats of trade-inhibiting protections, President Reagan went to Bonn hoping for commitments to start negotiating more liberal trade rules next year. It is doubtful that this alone could satisfy legislators representing jobless workers, but a promise of freer trade seemed better than nothing.

For reasons that have little to do with sound economic logic, the French are objecting to the resumption of trade talks. Their stance is hardly surprising. French farmers will be up in arms if the protectionist fence is lifted, and the implications for the increasingly unpopular

Western military alliance has never been persuasive. The size of the U.S. military presence in Spain also has been an irritant for some time. Prime Minister Felipe González and his Socialist Workers' Party have promised to bold a referendum on Spain's membership in NATO. Mr. González Javors staying in, but recent polls suggest that most voters oppose it.

Mr. Resean is not likely to attempt much in the way of public persuasion, since he needs to avoid any impression of exerting pressure on his hosts. But his presence is a calculated reminder that, in a dangerous world, it is better to have reliable friends than not. Perhaps it will turn out that the size of the American forces assigned to the four Spanish bases can be negotiated downward, as an indication of American responsiveness on a sensitive point. There is a nice symbolism to Mr. Reagan's schedule. He is to leave Madrid for Strasbourg, France, to address the European Parliament — the EC's elected legislature — before going on to Portugal. The itinerary delicately traces the line between the recent political evolution of the Iberian countries and the democratic traditions represented in the European Community they are now joining. That is a useful connection for an American president to draw.

Poland: Insidious Signs of a New Repression

N EW YORK — The suppression last week of the largest demonstrations in Poland since Solidarity was declared illegal in 1981 more than 15,000 people marched peacefully in Warsaw and 2,000 clashed with police in Gdansk - was only the most recent and obvious sign of the regime's efforts to impose neo-Stalinism.

Nor was that by any means the only evidence. Two leading dissidents - Jacek Kuron and Seweryn Jaworski — were sentenced to three months in jail last week after negotiating with the riot police to ensure that no violence was associated with the demonstration in Warsaw. Lech Walesa, winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, is confined to the city of Gdansk, which he cannot leave without a police permit.

Adam Michnik and two other leaders of the Solidarity movement — it is still active despite the ban — are in jail, charged with fornenting social unrest. Their trial, which is to open before the end of this month, could bring sentences of five years of prison and reopen the cases against them that were suspended last year under a government amnesty.

Clandestine independent publishing is being decimated by the secret police: One hundred and fifty editors and printers are being held under arrest. Yet the government continues to maintain that there are no political prisoners in Poland: It has coined the phrase "noncriminal prisoners" to refer to these publishers.

Official newspapers and broadcasts have ceased to speak of political opposition. Now it is "Western-inspired agents" or "imperialist sellBy Jacek Kalabinski outs." In an organized campaign, the government-owned newspapers have been pul letters from readers demanding a new law to allow the police to seize public-address systems in the Roman Catholic churches where such "agents" often speak. Many of the letters com-plain about the way "freedom of speech is abused" in these churches.

Thus, ironically, the official media of a Marxist regime are ostensibly defending the religious purity of the church — a purity supposedly threatened by priests who dare to speak about moral and social issues. The regime has also hinted publicly about a possible accommodation with the primate, Cardinal Jozef Glemp, and other "realistic" members of the church hierarchy - those who are ready to limit the church to purely liturgical functions and deprive it of its role as a defender of human rights.

Finally, a secret government report, leaked to Western correspondents, called in March for securing more disciplined activity of universities, the Polish Academy of Sciences and other research institutions." Intellectuals are to take warning "that anti-socialist activity will force the authorities to change their attitude toward academic activity" and that "determined opponents should be eliminated."

Many in Warsaw have noted that the govern-ment line seemed to become noticeably tougher about three months ago, just as Mikhail S. Gorbachev began to take over the rems of power in Moscow. General Wojciech Januelski and his advisers in Warsaw are said to have sensed that the new Soviet leader would impose a harsher political line, and they pre-empted it by stepping up repression and adding a new, threatening overtone to their official thetoric.

They apparently do not realize how difficult it would be to reimpose Stalinism on the Polish people. It will be difficult, not because General Jaruzelski is a liberal or a pragmatist, as he pretends to be. The reason has more to do with the nature of Polish society today. Gone are the days when young boys from the countryside enthusiastically joined the secret police to torture "counterrevolutionaries." Gone are the nights when people trembled in their homes, awaiting the sound of the bell - the policeman at the door that could lead to a death sentence.

"Normalization." the artificially quiet state 50 deeply desired by Moscow and by General Jaruzelski, cannot be imposed on a people determined to retain at least a de facto right to free sion, self-determination and association. The political and moral awakening of the Poles during Solidarity's 500 days of legal existence cannot be eradicated now by a repressive regime.

According to Karl Marx, history repeats itself as a farce. So it is with Stalinism in Poland today

- a grim, depressing farce,

TEW YORK - Walter Mon-Tew YORK — Waiter Mondale's campaign promise to raise taxes if elected president was not merely a gamble that failed, at high cost to him and his party; it is also an indirect but powerful factor in this year's budget battle.

The promise probably did not de-feat Mr. Mondale; after a series of primaries that exposed his weaknesses and strained the seams of his party, he had little chance to win anyway. But his promise of a tax increase almost certainly inflated Ronald Reagan's victory margin.

After initial hesitation, the president came down hard on the other side of the issue. Even Democrats, particularly in the South, denounced Mr. Mondale's plan; and he was further damaged by the realization that the new revenues he sought would be used not to provide goodies for the voters but to reduce the deficit.

There was, in fact, no great public demand for deficit reduction, outside Washington and Wall Street; few candidates for office in 1984 found that a burning issue. Mr. Reagan was even able in his debates with Mr. Mondale to get away with the claim - now discreetly abandoned - that economic growth would eliminate the deficit. So the Democratic nominee's gamble that the public would honor a candidate who was frank about his intentions only proved once again that elections are not often won by promises to raise taxes.

That lesson was not lost on members of Congress, few of whom have responsible deficit reduction, seem to shown enthusiasm for raising taxes have resigned the even in the face of $200-billion feder-dent's position.

had Mr. Mondale not so directly challenged Mr. Reagan on the tax issue, the president might not have campaigned so strongly last year against raising taxes ("over my dead body"), and might even have been persuaded to support some form of non-income tax increase this year.

That could have made substantial deficit reduction possible without the broad assault on social programs — including Medicare, Medicaid, student loans and school lunches - that Mr. Reagan and Senate Republicans have launched.

But as a result of Mr. Mondale's promise and his own campaign, Mr. Reagan now has planted his feet in concrete against what he derisively calls "the tax increasers"; and Republican leaders, who once conceded that new revenues were essential to have resigned themselves to the presi-

Before the San Francisco convention, Mr. Mondale was visited in Minnesota by Senator Bill Bradley of New Jersey, a co-sponsor of the Bradley-Gephardt "Fair Tax" — a tax-simpli-fication plan that predated by two years the roughly similar proposal by the Reagan administration's Treasury Department in November 1984. Mr. Bradley tried to persuade Mr. Mondale to adopt the Fair Tax and campaign for it, much as Mr. Reagan had made the idea of a "supply-side" tax cut the centerpiece of his 1980 campaign. But Mr. Mondale was not convinced and, instead, took his di-

By Philip Geyelin

WASHINGTON — No employee of or individual acting on behalf of the U.S. government shall recognize or negotiate with the Palestine Liberation Organization or representatives thereof, so long as the Palestina Liberation Organization Palestine Liberation Organization does not recognize Israel's right to exist, does not accept Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, and does not renounce the use of terrorism."

If that heavy language rings a bell, you may be thinking of Henry Kissinger's written commitment to Israel in 1975, restricting U.S. diplomatic access to the PLO as partial payment for Israel's agreement to disengage part of its forces from Sina. If so, you probably believe that the Kissinger policy is not binding on further administrations. Just recently, Ronald Reagan and Jimmy Carter have both talked about it in a way that gives precisely that impression, that sug-gests the president has a free hand. Not so. The language cited is the law of the land. Last October, it was surreptitiously tacked on to what is known as a "continuing resolution" - the legislative last resort for funding government spending at current levels when Congress is unable to agree on new appropriations for the coming fiscal year. It is a lousy way to legislate anything, but that is only one reason I bring it up.

Another is that it will come as news even to those who follow Middle East evenus with care. It was news to me when I found mention of it in a handout from the American Israel Public Affairs Commission, the Israeli lobby which had to know about it, having had a large hand in its enactment. It turned out, after asking around among knowledgeable authorities, to be news to all but a handful of administration officials, its congressional sponsors, and the members of congressional committees who wrote it into the money measure without henrings. That was the only time the question was put directly to a vote. If that is a poor way to legislate, it is an even worse way to make foreign is an even worse way to make foreign policy — as you would suppose the Reagan administration would be the first to agree. Only a few days ago. Secretary George Shultz was lecturing his State Department employees on the terrible legacy of "congressional restrictions on presidential flexibility, now imbedded in our legislation" as a consequence of Vietnam tion" as a consequence of Vietnam and Watergate. "Not only the War Powers Resolution, but a host of constraints on foreign aid, arms exports, intelligence activities and other aspects of policy," he said, have "weakened the ability of the president to act and to conduct foreign policy, and weakened our country. Yet Section 535 of last year's continuing resolution is specifically designed to restrict presidential flexibility." It was inspired by revelations of secret meetings in 1981-82 between PLO representatives and a State Department consultant.

Had it been in effect at that time, it Reagan administration's successful U.S. mediation in 1981 of an 11month cease-fire agreement between the PLO and Israel. It would have made it unlawful in 1982 for a U.S. envoy to deal with the PLO on arrangements for the removal of PLO guerrillas from Beirut under escort by a multinational force, which included

U.S. Marines. Its terms, moreover, go beyond both the original Kissinger commit-ment and President Reagan's stated conditions for dealing with the PLO by adding the requirement that the PLO "renounce the use of terrorism." The administration's acceptance of this tightened congressional restraint (while denouncing all other congressional meddling in foreign policy in general, and in Nicaragua in particular) speaks volumes about the spirit with which the Reagan administration approaches the responsibilities of what Mr. Shultz calls "global leadership" — when the case at hand is the Middle East. The maintenance of "momentum toward peace in the Middle East" is Mr. Shultz's stated goal. You would assume it is also part of his purpose for stopping by Jordan on his way back from a trip to Israel at the end of this week.

But the sense, shared among Arab and Israeli diplomats alike, is that the secretary is going through the mo-tions and that the addition of Jordan to his itinerary is a courtesy. That impression was reinforced by the downbeat reports on the recent swing through the area by the assistant secretary, Richard W. Murphy.

The Israelis, it seems, are standing pat; King Hussein of Jordan thinks he has gone as far as he can go. The core issue of Palestinian representation at any peace talks, in short, is unlikely to be resolved by Arab or Israeli mitiatives.

That is not to say that the United States ought to make the procedural breakthrough by embracing the PLO unconditionally as a negotiating partner. But neither is it to say that the Reagan administration should abjectly abandon the right to play an energetic, questing, honest-broker's role. Yet that is what is happening.
When the instigators of section 535

in last year's continuing resolution say they have State Department encouragement for writing the same language (with provision for emergencies) into some more permanent piece of legislation this year, you have to figure that in the Middle East the high principle of presidential policy-making does not apply. Washington Post Writers Group.

Medical History: It's in the Cards

By Irvin Molotsky

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — The Maryland branch of Blue Cross-Blue Shield, which provides hospital and medical insurance, has announced that subscribers will receive membership cards that can contain the equivalent of 800 pages of information on their medical history. Nationwide adoption, the insurer said, is expected in a few years. The card, which hospitals would use in determining treatment, employs the laser optics technology used in video disks and compact audio

The information can include a digitalized photograph of the cardholder, a facsimile of his or her signature, the extent of the health insurance, a copy of an electrocardiogram, a chest X-ray, a list of medicines being taken, the names of physicians who have provided treatment and other elements.

The information could provide life-saving details in an emergency. Blue Cross said, or it could help a hospital avoid unnecessary procedures.

Thomas H. Sherlock, executive vice president of Blue Cross-Blue Shield of Maryland and chairman formed by the health insurer to develop the card, said the card would be distributed to the 1.6 million members in Maryland at no cost to them. He said that doctors, hospitals and other healthcare providers had indicated that they would update information on the subscribers' cards without cost, as well.

Full distribution is expected next year after further testing this fall. Mr. Sherlock said. The cards are expected to be available in the rest of the United States in 1987.

Douglas Becker, 19, one of the developers of the card, said the system would be less costly than using expensive telephone connections to link the Blue Cross-Blue Shield computer with, say, a hospital. Instead, a person would carry the health-care record directly to the hospital.

Some people concerned about privacy in the computer age have advocated such a personal card as a way to increase confidentiality.

The card costs $1.25 to $1.75 to make and encode, Mr. Becker said.

"It's very frightening to hear the same thing 40 years later," he said. Yet the orders were not given by Germans, but by U.S. Secret Service officials. Over the last week they established a control over events in West Germany that made one television commentator liken them to "Roman legionaries in a foreign country.

Jews were not the only ones to feel brusquely treated. A senior official close to the French delegation said that President François Mitterrand had felt "seriously insulted." On Thursday, Secret Service agents reportedly held up the French president's limousine for 20 minutes after a formal dinner for the summit meeting leaders at Fal-kenlust Castle, near Bonn, until Mr. Reagan's car had left.

French diplomats said that pro-tocol dictated that Mr. Reagan leave first and that the delay caused no ill feeling. But others who attended the dinner described Mr. Mitterrand, waiting impatiently in the limousine, as incensed.

West German officials shared the French distress. A senior official said he "found it somewhat disturbing that I was in the chapcellor's complex and was prevented can security services."

The forcible removal of the French Jews was only one of nu-merous confrontations Sunday in which Jewish leaders said that the West German police had shown remarkable restraint. What troubled them, they said, were indications that the police did not act or German orders, but followed Se cret Service directives from the White House.

On Sunday, Secret Service agents had events tightly under control, accompanying West German police patrols, giving orders and checking the credentials of reporters and others attending the service at Bergen-Belsen.

They were detected at the airport when a customs officer noticed a rifle in baggage packed with chil-dren's toys supposedly brought as gifts. A 20-hour battle followed with Tanzanian-backed Seychelles troops, and most of the mercenaries fled in the bijacked plane.

Mr. Hoare, 65, who holds an Irish passport, is believed to be the last of the mercenaries to be released. He was freed under an amnesty offered to aged prisoners last year by President Pieter W. Botha. Most of his followers had been given lesser sentences and served only

A month ago, the professional elites demonstrated in Khartoum streets with great dignity until, on April 6, they forced the reluctant armed forces to take over.

Most striking was what was left out of the usual formula. The coup leaders did not call themselves a "revolutionary com-mand council" or proclaim themselves a "corrective movement."

naming a new government and jus-nifying their takeover with a list of promised, if vague, reforms. Now, every night in the Khar-tourn area, after the heat of the day abates, Sudanese flock to open-air rallies of parties that only recently emerged from hiding. The crowds follow the speeches with all the fervor of a people long deprived of democratic dialogue. Even hecklers are tolerated. But many Sudanese remember that after independence from British rule in 1956, the political parties were much to blame for the instability that led to military rule in 1958 under Field Marshal Ibrahim

Think tanks have formed among the professionals who spearheaded the final opposition to General Nimeiri to ensure that the transitional government stays on track until elections are held in a year.

These watchdog groups are outspoken in their criticism of their fellow professionals and other civilians. They note that it was because of civilian dithering in the critical days after the coup that army leaders set up the now-ruling Transitional Military Council to-fill the power vacuum. Also worrying is the knowledge that Iraqi and Libyan money is pouring in to finance various politi-cal parties. In general, the parties tolerate the interim civilian govern-ment out of a desire to get on with their own campaigning and to avoid responsibility for Sudan's enormous problems. Many Sudanese forewarn that things are bound to get worse be-fore they get better. That means more famine, chaotic economics and the likelihood of no quick solution to the insurrection in the south, which is sapping public finances and confidence.

Undeterred, the watchdogs sound determined to step in and scale down wage demands expected from among the more than 150 trade unions that now are members of the original anti-Nimeiri alliance of six professional groups and three political parties. So far, most foreign help is dictated by fear. Saudi Arabia was so concerned that less moderate men might seize power that it has sup-plied more funds than in the final Nimeiri period. Soon after the coup, a Sudanese military delegation received a $50-million check from Saudi Arabia and $62 million in oil credits that along with $82 million previously committed by Washington, should keep chronically strapped Sudan in and the International Monetary Fund remains unknown. Until Sudan can find $120 million to pay its IMF arrears, few donor countries are expected to produce the extra funds that some of them are considering to bolster the return to civilian rule.

The public and officials console themselves with rectifying the errors of the Nimeiri era, an essentially inexpensive enterprise.

With calm and thoroughness, the authorities are investigating corruption and wrongdoing. Unconfirmed reports insist that various Nimeiri middlemen now under arrest are offering to exchange their ill-gotten gains for a ticket out of

Soviet Says POWs Killed In Pakistan

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Twenty-four Soviet and Afghan prisoners of war were killed when they tried to escape from an Islamic guerrilla base in Pakistan, the Sovit ambassador to Pakistan charged Ambassador Vitali S. Smirnov said by telephone that the Soviet Union was considering lodging a formal complaint with the Pakistan sovernment for allowing the guerrillas to keep Soviet prisoners on Pakistani territory. He said this violated international law.

We are fully aware that they have been doing this and my government is considering making a protest," he said.

Mr. Smirnov was the first Soviet official to confirm that Soviet prisoners were being held at a guerrilla base near the city of Peshawar and that the prisoners tried to escape and were killed April 27. The Pakistani government last week denied that any Soviet prisoners were being held in the country.

It said the incident at the guernila camp was between two rival guerrilla factions and that one man was killed and several injured when an ammunition dump was blown

Mr. Smirnov said that 12 Soviet prisoners and 12 Afghan govern-ment soldiers were being held at the base when they overpowered a guard and escaped. The prisoners seized a weapons storehouse and demanded to be handed over to the Soviet Embassy, he said. The guerrillas opened fire on the prisoners, who then blew themseives up to destroy the large stocks of weapons and ammunition and prevent being recaptured, the am-bassador said.

Afghan guerrilla sources said recently that Soviet prisoners were being held at the camp and that here had been an escape attempt The prisoners seized an arsenal and negotiated with guerrilla leaders for several hours before the guerrillas opened fire, the sources said.

The sources said that 13 Soviet troops were killed, but they said nothing at the time about Afghan Army prisoners.

The Soviet Union has an estimated 115,000 troops in Afghanistan supporting the country's Communist government in its battle with Islamic guerrillas. The guerrillas operate from bases in Pakistan and Iran, but Pakistan says it provides only humanitarian aid to Af-ghan refugees and that there are no military operations.

Moscow later reduced their number as they fraternized with Afghans.

Hanoi 'Attack' in Tonkin Gulf: Evidence Indicates It Didn't Happen

By Robert Scheer Los Angeles Times Service

OS ANGELES - Twenty years ago, on the blackest of nights in the Gulf of Tonkin, when the moon died and dense log, angry seas, electrical storms and luminescent ocean microorganisms conspired to play tricks with a sailor's mind, America went to war. A murky incident - a purported attack on U.S. vessels by North Vietnam — led President Lyndon B. Johnson to order the bombing of North Vietnam, to obtain a congressional resolution approving the Americanization of the war in Southeast Asia and eventually to station half a million U.S. troops in Vietnam.

· However, a reconstruction of those events, based on once-secret government cables and formerly classified, witnessed accounts, indieutes that the attack never occurred.

The confusion began the night of Aug. 4, 1964, high on the bridge of the Maddox, an aging destroyer outfitted as a spy ship. Unable to see objects a few feet into the blustery dark, dependent on electronic information gleaned from radar, sonar and intercepted enemy com-munications, Captain John J. Herrick — a 44year-old veteran of two wars - concluded that the mysterious dots on his radar screen were North Vietnamese PT boats bent on attacking his two-ship flotilla.

Captain Herrick, commodore of the 7th Fleet's Destroyer Division 192, radioed an emergency call to Pacific naval headquarters in Honolulu that would soon be read to the president, who was eating breakfast in the White House 12 time zones away. Johnson was furious.
Two days before, the Maddox had fired first on three North Vietnamese PT boats that had closed to within 10 miles of it in what Captain Herrick believed was an imminent attack. Now, there had apparently been a second incident, and for the next 14 hours the president's men would plan a retaliatory air strike.

OHNSON - in the midst of an election campaign - insisted that decisive action be taken soon enough for him to announce it on television that night, even as his staff frantically tried to determine whether an attack had indeed occurred. In order to meet that deadline. Johnson would overrule the commander in chief of the Pacific Fleet and announce the bombing of North Vietnam before some of the U.S. pilots had even arrived over their targets.

In the daylight of Washington it was all very clear and simple - but not so clear back in the darkened gulf.

From its inception, the purpose of Captain Herrick's mission - which had been conceived in the White House and directed by the president's national security adviser - was largely secret, even to him. It had begun a week earlier, when the Maddox was re-equipped as an intelligence-gathering ship and sent to obtain infor-mation on Hanoi's radar and communications. as well as to make a show of force close to the North Vietnamese coast.

Simultaneously. South Vietnamese Navy personnel, trained by the United States and using U.S.-supplied boats, had begun conducting se-cret raids on targets in North Vietnam.

Unknown to Captain Herrick, one such attack had begun the night of July 30, immediately before he began sailing along the North Vietnamese coast. The North Vietnamese PT boats that closed on the Maddox on Aug. 2 were probably retaliating for that assault.

Dean Rusk, secretary of state at the time, conceded as much in a classified cable to General Maxwell D. Taylor, U.S. ambassador to Vietnam, the following night. The "Maddox incident is directly related to [North Vietnam's] efforts to resist these activities," Mr. Rusk said,

On Aug. 3, the day after that first Gulf of Tonkin episode, Captain Herrick requested that his patrol be ended because he thought the mission made the Maddox vulnerable. He was turned down by Admiral Ulysses Grant Sharp Jr.. commander in chief of U.S. forces in the Pacific, who felt this might call into question U.S. "resolve to assert our legitimate rights in of Captain Herrick's mission - was conducted by a communications box that had been placed between the Maddox's smokestacks. Intelligence experts stood watch inside the box, intercepting and translating North Vietnamese communications. Occasionally, the officer in charge of monitoring these communications would pop out with messages about what he thought the North Vietnamese were doing.

On the night of Aug. 3, another U.S.-directed launched and, according to communications monitored by the Maddox, the North Vietnamese confused that mission with Captain Herrick's patrol.

Early on the evening of Aug. 4, the intelligence officer reported to Captain Herrick that the radio communications indicated an imminent attack on the Maddox and her sister ship. Captain Herrick passed the warning on to Washington, It was 9 A.M. Eastern Daylight Time when the message was handed to Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara.

Twelve minutes later. Mr. McNamara called the president, who had been with Democratic congressional leaders.

They have?" Mr. Johnson thundered when he heard about the supposed attack, according to House Majority Leader Carl Albert, who had stayed on after the congressional breakfast. Now, I'll tell you what I want," Johnson said to Mr. McNamara. "I not only want those patrol boats that attacked the Maddox destroyed, I want everything at that harbor destroyed; I want the whole works destroyed. I want to give them a real dose."

At this point, however, Captain Herrick had not said that his ships were under attack, only that his radio intercepts pointed to the likelibood of an attack.

Immediately after breakfast, Johnson - who was preoccupied with his campaign against the Republican presidential nominee, Barry Goldwater - took a walk with an adviser, Kenneth

"The President was wondering aloud as to the political repercussions and questioned me rather closely as to my political reaction to his making a military retaliation," Mr. O'Donnell recalled four years later in a letter to Senator J. William Fulbright, Democrat of Arkansas, then chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee. "The attack upon O'Donnell wrote, "was going to come from the right and the hawks, and he must not allow them to accuse him of vacillating or being an indeci-sive leader. The emergence of the [Gulf of Tonkin] resolution itself was nothing but political the president took place in the morning. There was still no reason to doubt that an attack had occurred when, at 1 P.M., the president had lunch at the White House with Mr. McNamara; Mr. Rusk; Mr. Bundy; the director of central intelligence. John A. McCone; and the deputy secretary of defense, Cyrus R. Vance, Johnson was insistent that the North Vietnamese be

The record shows that Captain Herrick's cable expressing doubt about the attack arrived in Washington at 1:30 P.M., but there is no indication that the men at lunch were informed of its content, Mr. McNamara received the cable sometime after lunch and then called Admira

Sharp in Honolulu. The conversation between Admiral Sharp and Mr. McNamara, which was not declassified until 1982 under the Freedom of Information Act and which was omitted from previous Defense Department compilations of telephone conversations pertaining to the Gulf of Tonkin incidents, shows the developing uncertainty that

Mr. McNamara asked Admiral Sharp, "There isn't any possibility there was no attack, is there?" Admiral Sharp replied, "Yes, I would say there is a slight possibility." Mr. McNamara then said, "We obviously don't want to do it [attack North Vietnam] until we are damned sure what happened," and asked Admiral

Sharp, "How do we reconcile all this?" When the admiral suggested that the order to retaliate be postponed "until we have a definite indication that this happened," Mr. McNamara instructed him to leave the "execute" order in

At 4:34 P.M., Washington time, Captain Herrick, in response to Admiral Sharp's insistence for clarification, cabled, "Details of action present a confusing picture although certain that original ambush [on Aug. 4] was bona fide." Captain Herrick said there were also some sailors on the Turner Joy who reported seeing lights on the ocean as well as torpedo wakes. Some experts, including Captain Herrick and Admiral Sharp, now discount those sightings as a common visual effect created by luminescent ocean microorganisms. In his cable Captain Herrick was responding what he had been told about intercepted North Vietnamese communications rather than to what he saw. As he recalled recently: "Who am I to doubt stuff that's coming to me on official messages from the intelligence people in the services, you know? And I think that's what McNamara used. In the next hour, Admiral Sharp had to inform the defense secretary that the air launch vinced at all after the thing. But they had been had to be delayed further for technical reasons.

There was to be failure on both counts, Planes were sent to bomb North Vietnam before definitive word was reached from the ships about the torpedo attack - and a number of those planes arrived at their destination after Johnson had informed the world of the raid.

In the attack, two planes were shot down. One pilot was killed and the other captured.

Admiral Sharp still believes that there was a North Vietnamese attack on the two destroyers Ang. 4. Vehemently tapping a coffee table in his living room, he said U.S. retaliation was necessary to "send a message, especially when you're dealing with a bunch of goddamned Communists because they're ruthless bastards."

On the night of the gulf incident, though, the record shows that Admiral Sharp was concerned up until the end about whether a PT boat attack had actually been made by the North Vietnamese. A couple of hours before the planes were launched. Mr. McNamara had a top aide con-tact Admiral Sharp at his Honolulu headquarters to check once again. Admiral Sharp sent a message to Captain Herrick asking him to con-firm that his ships had been attacked.

Captain Herrick's reply was received in Washington at one minute before 11 P.M., 16 minutes after the first U.S. planes had taken off to attack North Vietnam:

Maddox scored no known hits and never positively identified a boat as such . . . Weather was overcast with limited visibility. . Air support not successful in locating targets. There were no stars or moon resulting in almost total darkness throughout action. No known damage or personnel casualties to either ship... Turner Joy claims sinking one boat and damaging another ... The first bout to close Maddot probably fired torpedo at Maddox which was heard but not seen. All subsequent Maddox torpedo reports were doubtful in that it is supposed that sonar man was hearing ship's own propeller beat." Recently, Captain Herrick said he confirmed the one torpedo firing because he assumed that the Maddox was moving at a slower speed and the sonar equipment only picked up rudder noises as torpedoes when the ship was moving at more than 25 knots. But when shown for the first time that his notes and the ship's log indicated that the Maddox had been traveling at 30 knots when the first alleged attack occurred,

Captain Herrick conceded that in all probability, no torpedo had been fired.

At 11:37 P.M., while Admiral Sharp was still searching out evidence to confirm an attack, 38 minutes after Captain Herrick's last cable listing the missing signs of a battle, Johnson went on

BOY! YOU'RE SURE LOOKING STRUNG OUT THESE DAYS, JIMBO.

This was interrupted by obligatory military service in the Algerian war from 1959 to 1961, which on a personal level provided time for reflection and a decision to add stage directing to designing. Stroux came through with the first offer, to stage Camus's "Caligula" at the Schauspielhaus, followed by his first opera, "Tristan und Isolde" at the Düsseldorf Opera. Until the watershed Salzburg "Barber," it was a career mostly in German spoken theater, although the range

French Flair, German Analysis

For Ponnelle's 'Don Giovanni'

By David Stevens

PARIS—Opera is a mixed medium, and few of its practitioners bring a more mixed background to it than Jean-Pierre Ponnelle, stage director and designer of the "Don Giovanni" that opened the fourth Mozart festival of the Orchestre de Paris last night. Indeed, except for his collaboration since 1982 with

Daniel Barenboim, the orchestra's music director, on the productions of Mozart's three great "Italian" operas, Ponnelle — although born in Paris 53 years ago

Until he burst onto the international scene with his 1968 Salzburg Festival production of Rossini's "Bar-ber of Seville," Ponnelle had worked almost entirely in the German theater world. Yet, while Ponnelle is a seemingly contradictory mixture of French flair and sense of style and German professionalism and passion for analysis, he comes by it naturally enough through ancestry, education and happenstance. He has homes in Munich and in the Sologne region south of Paris and, as he said during a break in rehearsals, professionalism and when I'm in Germany I miss the

The Ponnelle family has been a leading Burgundian winegrowing clan for generations, although Jean-

Pierre's grandfather was also a music critic and his father a journalist and broadcaster, while his mother's side brought a Central European theatrical background. But a crucial event in Ponnelle's adolescence came when his father was appointed to found a radio station in Baden-Baden, in the French zone of occupied Germany. The Southwest German Radio beencompassed Greek classics, Shakespeare, Ionesco and "Kiss Me Kate" and "Hello Dolly! Since that 1968 "Barber," however, Ponnelle's career has been that of an international and peripatetic operatic metteur-en-scène, but one with a rather Germanic penchant for systematic cycles. Among them have been the celebrated Monteverdi cycle at the Zurich Opera with Nikolaus Harnoncourt, Wagner's "Ring" at Stuttgart, and above all Mozart - first in Cologne, with Istvan Kertesz then Sir John Pritchard; in Zurich with Harmoncourt; at Salzburg with Herbert von Karajan, Karl Böhm and James Levine; and in Paris and Washington with Barenboim. The Paris "Don Giovanni" is being billed as a new production, which is not altogether the case. It uses sets that Ponnelle designed three years ago, but illness kept him from doing the staging then, and he also has redone the costumes. In any case, says Ponnelle, with Mozart there is no end to discovery. "When I do a revival of something from the usual repertory, it is more or less mechanical. With Mozart - never!" Then there is the matter of adjusting for the singers on hand. "This Don Giovanni is really green, young and aggressive. To have a Giovanni climbing to the balcony after the serenade is good for a young man, but it might not be so good for a not-so-young man."

If conductors like Ponnelle, and they usually do, it is puberty, when I was discovering the world, and the because he responds to them. "Opera is a partnership, puberty of postwar Germans, their rediscovery of all and since I am both the director and designer, my their art that had been banned by the Nazis," Ponnelle partner is the conductor. They see that I know music recalled. "I was in the French school there, but I was - a lot of stage directors can't read music - and l

Hans Rosbaud, the radio's music director then, was change in relationship to different conductors' tempi. Ponnelle frankly works with an elitist audience in invited to conduct by the newly founded festival at mind, educated and knowledgeable, who will get the Aix-en-Provence and the conductor needed a crash intellectual jokes he finds throughout Mozart and understand the social relationships. "Mozart is imposoped a symbiotic relationship. "We would go for walks in the forest while he tried to understand what I sible to interpret if you don't know what the church was in the 18th century, or what the relationship was told him about French, and I would try to understand between nobles and peasants. And the translations of his analysis, in French, of Bruckner's symphonies."
In Baden-Baden he became friendly with Hans da Ponte's librettos are so miserable - there is often a second level that gets lost in puritan translations." Werner Henze, then early in his composing career. The Despite a nonstop pace, Ponnelle has not done everything yet. He has his eye on Wagner's "Die Meistersinger" and Berg's "Wozzeck," and in July the Munich Opera Festival opens with his first staging of Berg's "Lulu," with Catherine Malfitano in the title friendship continued in Paris, where Ponnelle pursued a classic French education in philosophy, art history, painting (with Fernand Leger), and a lot of hanging out in bistros. One result was that Ponnelle designed the world premiere of Henze's first major opera, part and Friedrich Cerha (who completed Berg's The success of this production brought the utterly score) conducting.

Mozart's "Don Giovanni," Théâtre des Champs-Elyman theaters, and brought him into contact with two sees, also May 11, 14 and 17. The festival continues formidable personalities — Karl Heinz Stroux, for through June 13, with concerts at the Salle Pleyel, many years director of the Düsseldorf Schauspielhaus, including Mazart's version of Handel's "Messiah" (June whom Ponnelle regards as a kind of second father, and 9), and chamber concerts at the palace of Versailles Carl Ebert, then intendant of the Städtische Oper in (June 12) and Saint-Merri Church in Paris (June 13).

Devised by the critic Fedele d'Amico, acting as guest artistic director, the calendar of this year's Maggio is long - a May that stretches almost to July -- and full of allur-ing events (including Alban Berg's Lulu" in a new translation into Italian by d'Amico). In the stormy paranois of Italian cultural life, the festival remains a fixed star.

'Old Times,' Revived, Is Haunted by Past Players

By Sheridan Morley International Herald Tribune

T ONDON - Back at the Haymarket Thethat, after his "Betrayal" on film, invites us to consider another well-made mystery instead of one of the old pause-filled enigmas.

Three people in a room: a man (Michael Gambon) and two women (Liv Ullmann and Nicola Pagett), all of whom have at some time been sexually involved with one other and are now inhabiting different dimensions of time and space. Echoes of Sartre's "Huis Clos" are here, but so too are even stronger ones of Coward's "Design for Living": bisexuality and the utter impossibility of living either apart or together if there are three of you is what "Old Times" is essentially about. but unlike most of Pinter it is hedged around in old songs and wartime movie references that make it among the most accessible and even nostalgic of all his plays.

It's also now a play haunted by the ghosts of the original players, who died before their time: Vivien Merchant in London, and Robert Shaw and Mary Ure on Broadway, all brought an energy to the first productions that seems to be lacking here.

Liv Ullmann, in her London stage debut, brings to an essentially hothouse evening that air of Scandinavian health and efficiency with which Ingrid Bergman used to blast through Shaw. Michael Gambon is suitably bemused as Deeley, but it is Pagett as the girl that the other two are fighting over who is the revelation here.

No longer just a pawn in someone's else's power game, she becomes the central focus of a struggle on two levels of time, past and present, which are intercut and overlapped by Pinter to allow endless permutations of a sexual confrontation played through to a chilly end in language that seems to have been lovingly backed out of granite.

Coward's "Cavalcade," newly staged to open the 1985 Chichester season in only its second professional revival for more than half a century, is a stage epic of stunning through some bound volumes of old maga-Latre Royal 15 years after its London zines and happened upon a photograph of a premiere, Harold Pinter's "Old Times" troop ship leaving for South Africa. From comes up looking very strong indeed, thanks that single historical image grew a grandiose largely to a new production by David Jones show in three acts and 22 scenes covering 30 years of English upstairs-downstairs life. When indeed they came 40 years later to make the television series "Upstairs, Downstairs," it was surely in tribute to Coward and "Cavalcade" that some of the characters bore the same names. "Cavalcade" first opened in October 1931. a few weeks after Britain had come off the gold standard and two weeks before an election was to return a national government: Coward, as ever bleakly uninterested in politics, had failed to notice the significance of his accidental but as usual immaculate timing. His show was hailed as a triumph of patriotism, where he had in fact meant it to be nothing so simplistic or jingoistic.

This is an epic devoted to the much wider concept of duty that runs through most of his work, and somewhere in "Cavalcade" you can find almost everything that mattered about Coward as a dramatist and as a man: the strong sense of the immediate past, the concept of duty and decent behavior as above all else, the brisk edginess of a love scene on the Titanic, and, overall, a cascading sense of sheer theater. "Cavalcade" is not just about duty to nation: It's about duty to family, friends, talent, circumstances and ideals, and in among its great processional crowd scenes of war and celebration is actuwith the fortunes above and below stairs of convention he later explored in "This Happy Lyttelton stage, is a cov rustic fable about the Breed" and "Brief Encounter." Coward decided that an audience battered by the Depression might like to see something a little more lavish, not least Queen Victoria's funeral. It is to the credit of John Gale's new Chichester management to have rounded up 200 local amateurs to add to the resident 30 Equity professionals and staged all of that.

It is also good to notice that the director. David Gilmore (who recently also staged "The Hired Man" and is becoming something of an expert on stage pugeants), has seen and avoided the one great danger of "Cavalcade," which is that it can end up looking like a Tory party conference set to music. Did not Mrs. Thatcher quote (without acknowledgment) its famous "dignity and peace and greatness" toast in her last preelection address to the nation?

"Cavalcade" is not at all to do with politics the new production (in which Joanna McCallum and Lewis Fiander admirably lead us through the 30 years from Maleking to 1930) it is that Gilmore has drastically reshaped the end, so that instead of the scene of nightclub chaos suggested by Coward we get 200 people singing "Jerusalem," If Noel had wanted his epic to end at the last night of the proms, he'd have said so in the script.

ambition conceived one afternoon in Foyles bookshop in 1929, when Coward was leafing through some bound volumes of old magative form 1899, able European success in the early 1930s and is now being given its first London revival in more than half a century on the National's farmgirl of the title being loved and then left by a young Parisian journalist in search of a more sophisticated wife. It's the kind of show Marie Antoinette might have commissioned for one of her farmyard evenings at Versailles, and its appearance at the National seems curious until you remember that the director, Sir Peter Hall, also gave us "Akenfield" and seems to see something more in wheatfields than the chance of hay fever. Martine is quite beautifully played by Wendy Morgan, while around her are grouped Andrew C. Wadsworth as the faithless journalist, Jean Anderson as his craggy grandmother, Jessica Turner as the smart girl he marries and Barrie Rutter as the village boy with whom Martine eventually settles into a loveless marriage. But neither they nor the beauty of Alison Chitty's settings can disguise the fact that this is a fev and whimsiof that kind, and if I have any objection to cal period piece that might just about survive as a Rene Clair movie or a French musical of the "Parapluies de Cherbourg" variety but that looks desperately thin and lethargic at the Lyttelion.

As pastoral romances go, "Martine" de-serves a footnote in a history of French drama for having introduced what its author called "the value of the unspoken word," but despite the elegance of John Fowles' translation (marred only by his muddening use of the English "one" for the French "on") it ally a much smaller play, entirely concerned five acts and 90 minutes, Jean-Jacques Ber- would. I suspect, also benefit from the value nard's "Martine," which had an unaccount- of the unproduced revival.

Psychological Tests Stir Debate in Europe, U.S.

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

International Herald Tribuni ARIS — When a comptroller with 12 years' experience ARIS — when a comptroner with 12 Junior applied for a middle-management job with a French multinational, the company required psychological tests. Among other things, the tests purport to check out a job candidate's emotional stability. But some managers resent having to take tests devised for psychotics and schizos.

In the French case, the comptroller first had to look at a series of Rorschach inkblots. The Rorschach test is a personality and intelligence test in which a subject interprets the inkblot designs in terms that reveal intellectual and emotional factors. The comptroller replied to the request by saying that he simply saw an Clinical psychology, which uses such tests as the Rorschach one, differentiates between "normal" and "abnormal' behavior. This psychology is based on climi-cal observation of emotionally disturbed patients. By contrast, occupational psychology is based on observation of people singled out for their workfunction and skills, such as technicians or managers.

After the Rorschach test, the comptroller was given a box of wooden toys: houses, trees, a factory, shops and a church - and asked to build a village. He built one with a single shopping street because, he told the psychologist, he had been in Normandy the previous weekend, where many villages are of that type. Had he gone to a U.S. suburb for the weekend he might have done it

PARTLY because of a resistance by job candidates to such tests, British companies are switching from clinical-psychology tests that reveal personality "abnormalities" to more job-specific psychological tests, according to British psy-

"Rorschach tests are a gimmick rather like graphology [the psychological study of handwriting]. The process appears to offer a mystique but it is dubious whether it is answering questions" about potential job performance, says Joshua Fox of Career Analysts, a London-based group of occupational psychologists. But most French companies, according to psychologists in France, still have faith in clinical psychology.

Although job-specific tests may be frequently able to determine whether a manager is emotionally stable, they are more acceptable to the interviewee than tests using clinical psychology. Most function-oriented tests are based on empirical evidence after testing of a sample of managers assumed to be normal.

"We did use a form of inkblot tests," says Vic Duluwitz, manager of psychological services at Standard Telephone & Cables PLC. "A few years ago we decided to drop it because a lot of candidates thought it was a joke and it undermined the tests'

Saville & Holdsworth Ltd., the largest British company of occupational psychologists and a test publisher, estimates that it has 200 corporate clients. Career Analysts also lists 200 corporate clients. Independent Assessment & Research Center Ltd., a smaller British company of occupational psychologists, lists 20

Large companies, such as British Telecommunications PLC have in-house occupational psychologists. "We carry out a job-analysis then develop a test in relation to it. It's a lot more useful [than clinical psychology tests]," says a spokesman for British

Some British psychologists argue that the switch from clinical psychology to function-oriented psychological testing in Britain started after the introduction in 1975 of the Sex Discrimination Act and the Equal Pay Act banning, among other things, sexual bias in hiring. "We find Rorschach-type tests difficult to justify in terms of the Equal Opportunity Act," says Itll Nyfield, one of 14 psychologists with Saville & Holdsworth.

Bayer Profit Up By 28%

First Quarter Spurs Optimism

By Warren Getler ional Herald Tribune

FRANKFURT - Baver AG's first-quarter international pretax profit jumped 28 percent to 820 million Deutsche marks ($252.3 million) from 636 million DM a year earlier, Hermann-Josef Strenger, the managing board chairman, said Tuesday.

Bayer is the second West German chemical group to say it will match 1984 record net profit after posting strong first quarter results. Hoechst AG made a similar announcement earlier. Bayer is the second largest West German chemical company, by 1984 sales, after BASF AG.

"We assume 1985 profits will be just as good as last year's," Mr. Strenger said. As previously reported, Bayer carned a record 1.17 billion DM in 1984, up 56 percent from the 754 million DM the year earlier. The Leverkusen-based group has also announced that it was raising its dividend on 1984 results, to 9 DM a share, from 7

Mr. Strenger declined to provide a precise profit forecast for the year. He cautioned that a slowdown in the U.S. economy and erratic changes on the foreign exchange market present certain

World group revenue rose 11.1 percent to 12.04 billion DM from 10.84 billion DM, with sales in North America and South America posting the strongest gains, Mr. Strenger said. The North American sales were aided by the strong dollar; the South American sales benefited from strong demand for agro-Bayer's share price fell 1.30 DM to 2122 DM on the Frankfurt Stock Exchange Tuesday. The drop, analysis said, reflected mar-ket wariness of those companies whose earnings are strongly affect-ed by the exchange rate of the U.S. dollar, which has become increas-

Nepal's Fledgling Stock Exchange

KATMANDU, Nepal — It is not easy to run a stock exchange in one of the world's poorest coun-

There are no computers, ticker tapes or video terminals to speed the stock transactions, for example. The telephones go dead constantly. And when someone wants to buy, employees of the stock exchange occasionally have to go knock on doors to find someone to sell.

Yet the Securities Exchange Center of Nepal has been doing a brisk business since it opened its doors to stock transactions five months ago.

Its success is considered by many to be a symbol of a trend toward free-market capitalism in the developing world, where for years planners have relied on the government as the engine of econom-

"The volume and turnover and impact of the exchange may be small," said Leon J. Weil, the U.S. ambassador to Nepal. "But it has a very direction that His Majesty's government is taking in stimulating the private sector to stimulate economic growth."

Nepal, a mountain kingdom of 16 million people with an annual per capita income of $140, would hardly seem the place where a stock exchange could flourish. Most Nepalese subsist by eking out a living on farms in the valleys and terraced hillsides south of the Himalayan range, areas accessible only by foot.

Until recently, many of the country's biggest companies were owned and operated by the gov-erument. But last year, King Birendra began a program to have the government divest some of its shares in various companies, opening them for sale to the public.

This week, for example, shares of stock in the Nepal Industrial Development Corp. went on sale for the first time. The government-owned corpora-tion has invested in hotel construction, cement-

SEC Investigates Share Trading of Pickens Targets

By Fred R. Bleakley New York Times Service NEW YORK - The U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission is conducting a broad investigation into possible insider trading involving virtually all of the takeover targets of T. Boone Pickens, chairman of the Mesa Petroleum Co., a recent court document discloses.

The investigation is in addition to a narrower SEC investigation of trading in shares of the Unocal Corp., Mr. Pickens' current target. Mesa disclosed that investigation last week,

The broader inquiry suggests that the agency is trying to deter-mine whether someone who knew of Mr. Pickens's plans tipped off others before the plans were made

The investigation came to light in a decision issued in April by a federal district court in Amarillo Texas, where Mesa is based. The decision granted the SEC's request to see depositions taken last December from friends and associates. of Mr. Pickens. The depositions were for a civil suit that has been

In its 15-page decision, the court said the SEC issued a formal order of investigation on Jan. 28, 1985, in the matter of certain trading in securities of Phillips Petroleum and other issuers."

The other issuers under investigation include General American Oil Co., Cities Service Co., Superior Oil Co. and Gulf Oil Corp., all of which along with Phillips have been targets of Mr. Pickens, the court said. Shortly before the announcements of tender offers or proposed tender offers, the volume and price of both the common stock and the call options of those securities "increased significantly," the SEC found.

As is customary, the SEC would neither confirm nor deny whether an investigation was under way.

Mr. Pickens said Monday that the investigation was "ridiculous," He added, "I've never tipped any body on anything." He said that whenever someone asked about his specific intentions he said: "Both of us could go to jail for talking about that. Would you like to go to Sources close to the commission said that its interest was aroused by the filing of a civil suit last December by Phillips Petroleum that contended that Mr. Pickens "has unlawfully . . . engaged in the practice of tipping friends, fellow officers of Mesa and fellow members of the Amarillo Country Club of his various plans to acquire stock of major oil companies."

Depositions were taken just be-fore Mr. Pickens and Phillips agreed on the company's repur-chase of the shares he had acquired.

EC Simplifies Its Rules on Technical Standards

BRUSSELS - European Community ministers agreed Tuesday on new rules aimed at creating simpler and quicker common technical standards for manufactured prod-The accord was hailed by diplomats as a major step toward the free flow of goods in a truly common European market.

The ministers, responsible for the community's internal market, domestic rivals, Hoechst and BASF adopted a proposal by its executive commission that will enable products to be freely traded within community if they meet minimum safety requirements.

In deciding whether national norms should apply throughout the community during a transitional period, the commission will be guided by a consultative committee of national experts, diplomats said. This simplified system replaces the current procedure under which ministers took up to 12 years to agree on some of the 177 directives already in force, with the result that these were often overtaken by technical developments. Denmark, which had originally insisted that new standards could only be adopted unanimously, finally agreed to a qualified majority voting system, the diplomats said. They said the new regulation would not only speed up the introduction of community-wide norms and standards but also improve trade conditions within the bloc and help companies in one member state to tender for contracts in an-agreement would resolve a longstanding dispute with France on whether West German Industry Norms (so-called DIN norms) should apply to goods entering West Germany. "A new European norm certainly will replace our DIN norm when necessary but the new procedure is also fully in line with our safety rules," a senior West German dip-

HONG KONG —A reorganization of the Hong Kong Commodines Exchange began Tuesday, and the exchange was renamed the Hong Kong Putures Exchange.

A bill to amend commodity trading rules to cover trading in index futures had been drawn up and will be presented to Hong Kong's legislative council in July, officials said. A Hang Seng futures contract will be set up shortly afterward. RCUALA LUSAPUR PALM O'IL

Lebanon Duty Prompts Suicides in Israeli Army

TEL AVIV — Twenty-one Israeli soldiers have committed suicide in Lebanon since the 1982 invasion, and the stress of military duty in the volatile south was partly responsible, Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin said Tuesday.

"A preliminary investigation has shown there is definitely a certain influence, the scope of which is still unclear to me," he said on state radio. Mr. Rabin disclosed in the Knesset on Monday that 12 soldiers killed themselves in Lebanon in 1982 and 1983 while nine committed suicide last year.

LONDON - Marks & Spencer PLC. Britain's largest retailer, rethe year ended March 31, partly reflecting tougher competition in women's and children's clothing.

Responding to that competition, the company said it planned to increase its capital spending in Brit-ain to £220 million ($250 million) in the current fiscal year and $260 million next year from last year's £114.3 million.

Marks & Spencer said pretax profit rose to £303.4 million from £279.3 million a year earlier. Net profit increased 8.8 percent to £181.1 million, or 6.9 pence a share, from £166.4 million, or 6.3 pence a share. Sales grew 12 percent to £3.21 billion from £2.87 billion.

. The profit was toward the lower end of expectations, and Marks & Spencer shares closed on the London Stock Exchange at 134 pence, down 2 pence.

The spending is planned for such areas as expansion of shopping space, refurbishing and a charge-card operation introduced five weeks ago. As a result of the higher produced to the second section of the section of spending, the company estimated that its borrowings will rise to 20 percent of equity over the next few years from near zero at present. That would imply net borrowings of around £250 million.

If you still believe in me, save me.

For nearly a hundred years, the Statue of Liberty has been America's most powerful symbol of freedom and hope. Today the corrosive. action of almost a century of weather and pollution has eaten away at the iron framework, . etched holes in the copper exterior.

Less than a mile away on Ellis Island where the ancestors of nearly half of all Americans first stepped onto American soil, the Great Hall of the Immigration Center is a hollow ruin. Rooms are vandalized, walls crumbling in decay.

Inspiring plans have been developed to restore the Statue and to create at Ellis Island a living monument to the ethnic diversity of this country of immigrants. But unless restoration is begun now, these two national treasures could be closed at the very time we celebrate their hundredth anniversaries. The 230 million dollars needed to carry out the work is needed now.

All of the money must come from private donations; the federal government is not raising the funds. The Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Centennial Commission appointed by President Reagan is asking every American to contribute. The torch of liberty is everyone's to cherish. Could we hold up our heads as Americans if we allowed the time to come when she can no longer hold up hers?

You can keep the torch of liberty burning bright. Send your taxdeductible contribution to The Lady, Box 1986, N.Y.C. 10018. Or call, toll free, 1-800-USA-LADY

I miss you at

By Irene Handl. 344 pp. $15.95. Alfred A. Knopf, 201 East 40th Street, New York, N. Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Michele Slung

66'The Sioux" is a novel that calls to mind the familiar image of the rabbit frozen in the glare of headlights. In this case it's the hapless reader who's caught, mesmerized by namess reader who's caught, mesticated by the hard glare given off by the family Benoir, an elegant but ferocious French-Creole "tribe" whose nickname gives the book its title. Irene Handl, describing her creations, with their great wealth and even greater whimsicality, brings their barbaric rituals to life with something library archives leavely to the thing like an anthropologist's eye.

"Outsiders, beware" is what a sign posted on the Sioux reservation should caution, as Vin-cent Castleton, an English banker from a wholly different aristocratic tradition, quickly learns. Newly married to the beautiful Marguerite Benoir, whose third husband he is, Castleton tries to rearrange some of his in-laws rimals. His efforts at mild reform, in fact, are all that might be considered plot in "The Sioux"; the rest is a sort of literary diorama, with the Benoits on display much as they might be in a museum, behind glass.

Peering in, one can't help but view them as exotic and unreal creatures, maintaining their hothouse existence in residences on two conti-nents. When the Benoirs leave France for Louisiana, or vice versa, along go their Rolls-Royces — and the impeccable chauffeurs to drive them. Favorite delicacies and special pieces of furniture cross the Atlantic with equal regularity, as does a large feudal retinue: two valets (for one man — Armand, Margue-rite's brother and the head of the family), a chef, a maître d'hotel, assorted maids, a nanny, cher, a matter d noted, assorted maids, a namy, a governess and a bodyguard.

Armand Benoir, a small, charismatic peacock of a fellow, sees nothing at all odd in his family's way of doing things; in matters of opulent fastidiousness, he quite sets the pace.

At all times, even when in bed with his mistress of the moment, Armand keeps perched on his shoulder his bad-tempered pet monkey, and he's capable of sulking for days if forced to dine before 9.

For many reasons, and not just the unsavory nature of this particular set of Gallic pluto-crats, "The Sioux" isn't an easy book to read. Keeping up with the characters' ever-changing nicknames is one problem.

"The Sioux" was first published 20 years ago and is, rather amazingly, being brought back as a hardcover "event," Handl, a half-Austrian, half-French actress, is now 83: she has written only one other novel. This one is quirkly seductive enough, despite its streak of unpleasantness, to make us want to know much more about the author and her work.

Michele Slung wrote this review for The Washington Post.

By Anthony Corton
Washington Past Service
DETROIT — It was the day after the Detroit Pistons beat defending champion Boston, 125--117 in Game 3 of the National Backetball Association's Eastern Conference semifinals. It should have been a relatively happy time for Isiah Lord Thomas. The Piston guard had had 26 points and 16 assists (and he would go on to rack up 21 points and 10 rebounds in Sunday's series-tying victory).

But in front of his locker after an afternoon practice, his only only after the media horde has departed does Thomas relax.

The press has a job to do and I understand that," he said. "But it seems like if you're not saying anything controversial, not ge ting into a words war, they don't want to hear it. They walk away and act like I'm not helping them. I guess it's their problem." As recently as last season, he might have assumed the fault was his. The first-draft 1983 choice from Indiana remains one of the league's most ebullient players, but his demeanor on Fri-day was part of an ongoing transformation. "I'm pretty sure it's there," he said. "I'm not one to sit back and analyze myself, but I guess I'm developing as a

Thomas, who turned 24 last week, has become his own person. He's no longer "Pocket Magic," a slightly belittling reference to Earvin Johnson of the Los Angeles Lakers, another allstar who also happens to be Thomas's best friend.

These days, he's simply Isiah Thomas, basketball player. Looking at the numbers, that's no bad thing to be. An all-star in each of his NBA campaigns, Thomas averaged 21 points a game and set a league record for assists (1,123) in the 1984-85 regular season. In the playoffs, his scoring has increased to 23.8 points; he's averaging 13 assists a game and is shooting 51 percent from the field.

That Thomas's playoff stats are better, that he seems to have a grimmer aspect - and that the Pistons are in the second round of the playoffs for the first time since 1977 — aren't random co-incidences. "I think up to now he's been searching for where he belonged, on the team or in the league," says center Bill Laim-beer, "Now it's just established that he's a great player. He's the authoritative figure on our team. What he says is the final word on bow things will go for us."

That comes from an all-star who plays the focal-point position on most NBA teams. It's not

used to give Coach Chuck Daly pause for concern. "It's a bit

strange being so dependent on a 6-foot-1 [1.85-meter] guard, but obviously Isiah is an outstanding player," Daly said. "There's a big load placed on you with any success, but in the time I've been here Isiah's only become more mature, his concentration level is consistently higher. "The decisions he makes are the best thing for our club." Sometimes Thomas's decisions involve immediate, handson action. In a game dominated by behemoths, it may be his diminutive stature that creates such a stir when such moments occur. The ultimate came in the fifth game of last season's first-round playoff; New York won, but not before Thomas forced overtime - by scoring 15 points in the fourth period's final 1:57. There are times," said Daly, when he feels he can go one-onfive and no one will stop him."

Thomas no longer tries to fathom such incandescent moments. "The game isn't that complicated to me. All I'm dom' is playin' ball," he said. "People ask me to break things down, to describe the science of passing. Man, by the time you'd try to stop and think about all that, the play's over."

Some teammates say Thomas's greatest contributions come away from the basketball, and he indeed may be proudest of his leadership qualities. In Thurs-day's Game 3, on Boston's first possession after Robert Parish leveled Laimbeer with an elbow, Thomas took Larry Bird out of a shot with a forearm to the head.

"If one of my guys is fighting or needs help, then I've gotta be there. If I'm with you, I'm with you all the way," he said. "I'm not goma sit around and watch. Even if I get beat up, at least I can say, You got a black eye, I got a black eye, but we were there. That's a lot different than, Man, you really got messed up."

Thomas knows there are more subtle forms of leadership as well. To make everyone on the team happy, I think that's really my job, to keep them away from problems off the court and on. Chuck may yell at a guy during practice. I'll go to the guy and say, 'He's telling you right —just don't take it personally because he's yelling."

Thomas is able to impart such advice now because he's taken it to heart himself. "If they still want to think of me as a little Magic, that's O.K. It doesn't bother me. I'm very comfortable with myself. I respect myself."

UEFA: Season of Inconsistency

I.ONDON - The season's curses are coming home to roost. Between now and the end of May, the grand finales of European club soccer will be tinged with ridicule. Two of the three major competitions — the UEFA Cup final's first leg this Wednesday and the Cup Winners' Cup final a week later — involve teams which, in common justice, could not both be

Both were second-leg matches, and both Rapid and Inter were losing substantial leads when they had a player allegedly struck down. Rapid had already forfeited its 3-1 advantage, and its players were visibly inciting riotous behavior with all manner of blatant bodily as-

Two bottles landed near the goal-mouth; one, Rapid claimed, caused the slight but apparently concussive snick on defender Rendi Weinhofer's brow. Videotape replays disproved the bottle theory, so Rapid's club doctor res-tified that something else, possibly a coin, caused a wound requiring two stitches.

UEFA cashed in - fining the Austrians 30,000 Swiss francs (about $11,000) for "especially incorrect conduct of its team" and also ordered a neutral-ground replay, which, after horrendous assaults by drunken spectators on two Rapid players, reversed the re-

In that year, Inter persuaded UEFA to replay a European cup match it lost, 7-1, in Mönchengladbach because Roberto Boninsegna had been laid out by a Coca-Cola can. Inter drew the replay and advanced, and only last year Sandro Mazzola, who had passed the can to the 1971 referee, confessed that his was full and the one that struck Boninsegna had been empty.

United States saw it 147-139 and referee Stanley Christodoulou of South Africa had it 146-141. Laciar waged an intelligent, patient fight, relying on superior skill and experience. It was his ninth successful title defense since regaining the flyweight championship from Juan Herrera on May 1, 1982, and his 58th victory against six losses and nine draws. Ranked No. 3 by the WBA, Montero is now 23-2-1. Laciar dominated most of the fight with inside counterpunching. He had trouble reaching his taller opponent from a distance, but repeatedly got the better of their exchanges on the ropes. Montero had a shot at becoming the first Frenchman to bold a world title since Alphonse Halimi lost the bantamweight title to José Becera in Los Angeles on

Goring Named Coach of NHL Bruins

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Bruins, stung by dwindling National Hockey League fortunes, on Monday named veteran center Butch Goring, 35, head coach and defensemen Mike Milbury assistant coach. General Manager Harry Sinden had served as interim coach after firing Gerry Cheevers Feb. 13, 1985.

Goring, a 16-year veteran, was acquired by the Bruins on waivers from the New York Islanders in February, Milbury, 32, has been a Boston regular for nine years. Sinden said both will retire as players to concentrate on coaching. After finishing fourth in the Adams Division this season, the Bruins Brealy hit his third homer of the lost to Montreal in the first round of the Stanley Cup playoffs. Boston has

Spinks Will Defend Title Next Month

LAS VEGAS (UPI) — Michael Spinks, the undisputed light heavy-weight champion, will defend his title here June 6 against Jim McDonald, it was announced Monday. It will be the 10th title defense for Spinks, 28. est batting average of 207, had 10 who has a record of 26-0 with 18 knockouts. McDonald, 26, is ranked (AP, UPI) No. 7 by the World Boxing Association and is 16-0 with 15 knockouts.

The Red Banana Menace

NEW YORK — What has 58,000 telephones, almost as many people as Houston, and threatens the security of the United

As every student of the World Almanac knew immediately after swer is Nicaragna. Those same stuget rid of the government are going dents know that when the count to have a hard time getting a telewas last taken the United States phone installed. had only 191 million telephones to match against Nicaragua's 58,000.

The arithmetic is ominous: For every 58 telephones with which Nicaragua can hit us, the United States has only 191,000 telephones with which to retaliate.

Closet Stalinists and America- Americans. haters will say that American supenority on this scale proves President Reagan overrated Nicaraguan power when he ordered a trade embargo to shield the United States against an avalanche of Marxistgrown bananas. Don't be deceived.

If superiority of 191,000 to 58 looks impressive, consider the population figures. What the soft-headed liberals overlook is that while our telephones must support a nation of 234.2 million people, Nicaragua's have only 2.8 million people to serve.

Has it occurred to you that 234.2 million people with 191 million telephones do not have enough of these vital machines to equip every citizen with a phone? Simple arithmetic reveals why the Pentagon is deeply alarmed.

Fact: With 234.2 million people and 191 million telephones, we have a desperate shortage — one phone for each eight-tenths (0.8) of telephones the Nicaraguans have one phone for every 48 people. Doesn't this put them at a disadvantage? Hah! To believe that is to fall for the drivel spread by the so-called Neo-Old New Deal Big Go-

More Fact: With their 58,000

vernniks. Consider how many Nicara-guans yearn to be free of their Red masters so they can live under a new government freely chosen by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency. Would you guess that 47 of every 48 Nicaraguans, given the blessed opportunity offered by a telephone, would hesitate for an instant to call the White House and say "Uncle," as Reagan has politely asked their insolent government

Why are these 47 of every 48 Nicaraguans not calling the White House already? It is obvious: In a country with one telephone for evreading the first two clues, the an-ery 48 people, the 47 who want to

> To get a telephone in these straits, it is probably necessary to cotton up to the powerful Marxists who run things and promise to collaborate in their schemes for putting Red bananas on the breakfast cereal of unsuspecting North

These hard facts demonstrate why people who really care about America are in favor of the president's huge new "Banana Wars"

If we can provide two telephones for every living American — excepting only the handful of surviving big-government liberals who can't stand it that the president has a fantastic smile — Nicaragua's chances of getting its Marxist-Leninist bananas into the innocent North American stomach via the oatmeal could be eliminated.

This is the assumption behind the multibillion-dollar "Banana Wars" project. It would provide every U.S. citizen with the tele-phone wherewithal to call three other citizens immediately upon rising and caution them to make sure their bananas are not Red Nicaraguan bananas before slicing them onto the cereal.

On the Central American front, the CIA would be authorized to slip thousands of heavily equipped guerrilla telephone installers (the "phontras") into the Nicaraguan countryside to install telephones in the huts of all who are willing to use them to dial Washington and call for an end to big government, except at the Pentagon. Interested sources say Nicara-guans refusing to let the phontras" install phones definitely will not be shot, provided they have a reasonable excuse, such as having teen-agers who would drive them crazy if there was a phone in the

Pioneers of Jet-Age Aircraft Design

By Michael Keman Vashington Post Service 7 ASHINGTON — Even before Pearl Harbor, the skies around San Diego were always full of planes. They were prop planes, and they made a lot of noise. You could tell the different bother to look up. But there was one we kids all watched for. It was sleek and slim, with twin fuselages like a catamaran, and it whipped past you without a sound, so smooth and fast you weren't quite sure if you'd really seen it. The roar came after. Even the roar was roars, and after a while you didn't

That was the P-38. The elegant Lightning was perhaps the only plane the American public loved ust for the look of it.

Its designer was Clarence L. (Kelly) Johnson, who was in Washington recently for the opening of an exhibit, Designers for the Jet Age," at the Air and Space Museum. So was another legendary aircraft designer, Ed-ward H. Heinemann, who de-signed the first plane to fly at Mach 2, twice the speed of sound.

"The P-38 had only one seat," Johnson said, "so when I went on the test flight I had to sit piggyback on the pilot. Five hours at 25,000 feet. Its problem was its compressibility.

That is to say, when the plane went into a vertical dive ap-proaching the speed of sound it tried to curl under and its tail vibrated dangerously. Johnson redesigned the wing, and the P-38 became a vital long-range fighter-escort in the Pacific theater of World War II.

Fighter pilots liked it despite a certain reputation as a jinx, because it could peel off equally well to right or left, a rare quality in those days, when spinning propellers created a constant torque or twist to one side or the other. The P-38's twin props turned in opposite directions, neutralizing the torque. It was the first plane to do this, Johnson said, since the

Wright brothers' craft.

Johnson, 75, began drawing planes as a kid, and decided at age 12 that he would design real ones. He worked 50 years for Lockheed Corp., starting as a tool designer in 1933, and helped develop more than 50 planes, from the F-104 Starfighter (the first operational jet to achieve Mach 2) to the U-2 spy plane.

In 1943, working against time and in deep secrecy, Kelly John-son (the nickname came from his green neckties) designed and built the first American jet fighter, the F-80 Shooting Star, using a British engine. He had only blueprints of the revolutionary de Hailland engine, and the hardware itself arrived only seven days before the airframe was completed. The engine cracked on the first test flight, so a new one had to be flown in from England. This time the engineers and executives watching saw what a jet could do.

As the Lockheed account has it, the test pilot, Milo Burcham, made one low pass across the field and went whistling up out of sight. Then the show began, Accustomed to the controls, Bur-cham came down from high altitude so fast that no one knew he was coming until he passed overhead and the roar hit the crowd."

One of Johnson's favorites was the SR-71 Blackbird, a 1960s reconnaissance aircraft that flew faster than a bullet, at Mach 3 (Washington to Los Angeles in about an hour). Everything in the Blackbird had to be pioneered the titanium forgings that would hold at 800 degrees, the hydraulics and fuel systems, the escape system that had to work at 100,000 feet (30,000 meters).

Today Johnson is senior adviser to the "Skunk Works," Lockheed's advanced projects depart-ment, where "if I can talk about it, it's obsolete."

Johnson said he appreciated the time saved by computers, especially in eliminating much of the trial and error in design details. But he still has his slide rule. Heinemann, 77, like Johnson a Michigander displaced to Cali-fornia, has been a chief engineer at Douglas since 1936. Something of a prodigy, he quit high school at 17 and started building boats up to 60 feet long, studying on his own. Within a year Douglas snapped him up as a designer.

His creations include the SBD Dauntless dive bomber, the D-5582 Skyrocket, the F-4D Skyray and the A-4 Skyhawk, which was in production for 25 years, the longest for any jet combat air-craft. He designed the AD-1 Skyraider under a 24-hour deadline. He also designs boats, and at the exhibit opening he was handing out a brochure for the Super H-3 patrol boat, "designed in the Heinemann tradition of cost-efficient military systems.

This is the catch in designing planes: It's one thing to draw a lovely air-smooth shape, but quite another to pack it efficiently with all its equipment.
"I never worked with contract engineers," Heinemann said. "I always had my own team. I was the head guy with all the respon-sibility. I ran the damn show, My people came in with an air conditioner that weighed 25 pounds when it was supposed to be 12 pounds, and I said, 'Out! Do it over!' They brought it back in at

Some say it was the carrierbased Dauntless that won the Battle of Midway and turned the tide of the Pacific war.

"I must have made 50 full-out dives in that thing in the rear seat behind Vance Breece," he said. "It was kind of exciting."

Every plane designer has a back-to-the-old-drawing-board story to tell. Vance Breece was also the pilot on a Dauntless pre-cursor, the BT-1, Heinemann remembered, when Hugh Dryden, now of NASA, asked for a test "Vance came down and said, 'The bomb tail fell off!' and we were yelling and swearing at each other, and Dryden walked up and said politely, 'My goodness, are you still using that bomb? I tested that bomb in

"I said, Well, we better build a proper bomb.' So I designed a basic shape for various weights and five different makes of planes, and it's still the international standard shape."
